It is quite rare to meet teenagers who don't like sports. When you are young, you know how important it is to (1) _____ physical exercise if you want to be healthy and strong, and for that reason you often concentrate on just one sport with so much enthusiasm that in the end you can't live (2) _____ it. The problem is, though, that as you grow up you have less and less spare time. At your age, you have to study harder (3) _____ you want to get good marks to go to university, with perhaps only one afternoon a week to do any sport. This happens just when you are at the best time for many sports, such as gymnastics and swimming. By the time you finish all your studies, you will probably be too old to be really good at sports like those, but if you spend enough time on (4) _____ while you are young, then one day you will find that you are very good at your sport but too old to study, and you will find it (5) _____ to get a good job. Somehow, it doesn't seem fair.

If we look a look at how people in Europe communicated just one hundred years ago, we would be very surprised to find out that English was hardly used outside the United Kingdom. The language most commonly used between people of different nationalities was French. However, that is not the case nowadays. English has replaced French as the international language of communication. Today, there are more people who speak English as a second language than people who speak it as a first language.

There are many reasons why English has become the language of international communication. Britain's colonization of many parts of the world had something to do with it, but it is mainly due to America's rise to the position of major world power. This helped spread popular American culture throughout the world bringing the language with it.

But is it good that English has spread to all parts of the world so quickly? Linguists have suggested "Esperanto", an artificially put-together language, as a solution to international communication problems but without success. So English will continue being the world language until some other languages, maybe Chinese, which is the most widely-spoken native language in the world, takes over as the world's international language instead of English.

Câu 31. What does the word — “which” in paragraph 3 refer to?
